PRINT & KEEP · READY BEFORE IT'S NEEDED

Lost-Pet Flyer

Photo box, big name, tear-off tabs — fill one in today, slide it into the folder, and hope it stays brand new forever.

LOST PET

please help us bring a much-loved animal home — thank you for looking twice tape a photo here — one where the face and the collar both show

Pet's name (big enough to read from the street)

Last seen — where:

Last seen — when:

Breed, colour & size:

Collar, tag, chip & quirks (what they do when scared):

Please don't chase.

A scared pet runs again — chasing can turn one worried neighbour into moving targets. Call instead, stay kind, and give us the joy of coming out ourselves.

call right away:

or call the clinic:

found by?

Post on porches, lampposts, the vet, the corner shop and the park gate. Snip the tabs below; every tab fits a car window.

call: | call: | call: | call: | call: | call: | call: | call: | call:

HOW TO USE IT

How to Use · Lost-Pet Flyer

The flier nobody ever wants to print — which is exactly why it’s best printed early.

What this sheet builds

Preparedness with a soft landing: a flyer that only needs a photo, a name and a phone when it matters. Filling one before anything happens takes minutes; filling one at midday on the worst Thursday tends to take tears.

Sixty-second setup

1. Pencil in the clinic’s phone today — it doesn’t change often, and it’s the one number every stranger has in common.
2. Leave the rest blank until needed, then fill with the thickest pen in the house.
3. Reprint from the folder as needed; keep the master clean of coffee rings.

If it happens for real

- Walk, don’t drive, the routes the pet already knows; call while walking.
- Say “lost pet, please don’t chase” out loud — it gives neighbours the one instruction that helps.
- Kind people help; anyone asking a fee or a code to return the pet is resisted — work with your vet and the local shelter instead.

Warm tip

The “quirks” line matters more than it looks: a pet that bolts at scooters or hides under porches tells a finder exactly how to help without adding fear.